Contrada® System and Freestanding TrendWall®

"I am not complaining," continues Williams. "And I wouldn't have done it any other way, but it did take a lot of time." However, all agree the results were wonderful.

Bank customers are happy with the look of their relocated bank. They especially like the overall open look with individual privacy. "We knew confidentiality was important to our customers," says Williams. "So we added acoustical panels to the upper voice areas of the spaces. We also added many more conference rooms."

The new space boasts nine conference rooms most of which are small – designed for just two to four people. Some of the rooms were built the traditional way with plaster walls. Others were created with Trendway's TrendWall®, a moveable wall system, which will allow the bank to easily reconfigure those spaces as their needs change.

The Bank of Holland's individual offices have an entirely different look now. On the first floor there's 100% reuse of product from what was used in the space across the street. While the furniture is exactly the same, the look is transformed in its reconfiguration and well adapted in its new environment.

"It was like working with a giant set of Tinker Toys," comments Williams. "Counting up all the pieces and figuring out what would go where was quite an undertaking. And because of the flexibility of the Trendway product, we had lots of choices in order to make it all work. Thanks to the help from Modern Interiors, a Trendway dealer for over 30 years, it all came together."

The result is "we got just what we wanted," says Williams. "And we love it! It's user friendly and very comfortable." In fact, that is the one word everyone uses to describe it – "comfortable."

"And best of all," concludes Williams, "it will continue to grow with us far into the future."
